Déambulation

No one had yet thought of creating poetry out of the assembly of heterogeneous photographic elements, his innovative creative contribution. The photographic realism of his work is the essential, sufficient ingredient of the art of his compositions. They transfigure the real, imparting it with dreamlike qualities that are not unreal... but surreal.

Others may have spoken of the magical realism or "transreality" of Michel Kirch's compositions. To my mind, any reflection of reality is magical and all photography holds its share of magic: that of the "double": the magic of presence in absence, conferring a new presence to the reality represented, now absent. This is why photography is recognized as an art when it affords the singular, magical charm of the supernatural.

But here is Michel Kirch working a new kind of magic, with the meeting of several realities that do not communicate with one another. "Transreality", which links some realities to enable a new reality to emerge, is a term that suits his work well because it also contains the idea of surpassing, of going beyond. Hegel's "meta reality" could apply perhaps as well to Michel Kirch's art, in the sense that the surpassing conserves that which is surpassed, while creating a new reality.

It is because I am sensitive to all that surpasses while conserving that which does not –expressing the notion of metamorphosis– that I am touched by Michel Kirch's compositions. It is also because I am sensitive to all that can awaken our dormant poetic sense that I marvel at his work. I might add that I am moved to the very depths of my subconscious.

Thus, in passing from one composition to the other (...), I am borne away by a wave of emotions, as if by a symphony. (...) It is to be noted that humanity is always present in this work, whether in the shape of individuals or architecture reflecting the successive ages of the history of civilization.

Everything in this visionary art is at once familiar and alien, and each image provides material for dreaming, thinking, meditating. The work of Michel Kirch fosters meditation on the mystery of the human condition and the insertion of man in the universe.

Today, we are experiencing climate change. Reliving humanity's eternal obsession with the Apocalypse and the end of time, all sorts of prophecies and theories are coming to light, from the most heartening to the most devastating.

It is tempting to express these visions, as if to conjure the torment ahead. "The gift of Death is that all we have left to do is die", said Nietzsche. And, as Beauty seems inseparable from the Universe, a certain harmony falls into place, and new landscapes appear. It has come to pass and the survivors contemplate the new Creation in the hope of a fertile dawn... What could be entitled An Aesthetic of the Coming Catastrophe is in fact a timeworn tale.

Cataclysms have shaped our history and geography in a ballet of slow or rapid mutation, causing the extinction of some species, triggering the generation of others. This is why vestiges of destruction, erosion, and disappearance often appear here as witnesses of time immemorial... to offer them a second life, in sum. As for mankind... MK

night dance

The character alone bears the brunt of the human condition. His gestures, his silences, his fervors are universal, insofar as they translate how each one of us can or must deal with making our place in the world. Miniscule and at the same time a giant, he is lost...and yet so fully present.

His silhouette conveys the legitimacy or impropriety of his presence in a given place. That presence could be read as incongruous if the energy driving him did not transcend the given landscape, the conventional idea. He is a catalyst, he is a conscience; the Awakening lies in wait...

Here, landscape is the test of the awakened. Its elements are powerful, sometimes immense, often unsettling. It mirrors the character's internal topography: darkly saturated depths, labyrinthic paths to choose from, craggy hills to climb.

But the landscape is in need of awakening, just as the awakened cannot be so without it. The two are complementary in their sharing of an energy whose genesis hinges on the balance of their encounter.

With "The Awakened", Michel Kirch confirms his intention to etch spirituality into the very structure of his work. MK

chosen themes
> New York Energy

NY Energy 4

In New York, one dares. Anything seems possible once the framework has been defined, the rules set... Spilling out of the framework freely, while indefatigably proclaiming new limits...

Thus the World Trade Center, vast interchange and heart of the global economy. Thus a unique artistic influence and the first planet-wide melting pot, with innovation for a manifesto.

Sparking ceaseless interaction and unlikely synergies—allied to a powerful imagination—to confer a particular pulse to this city... Everything is in motion here, drawing you into an energy dance that will NY I make you or break you, depending on your nature... Infinity was the norm until 9/11, when, mirroring the collapse of the Twin Towers, the illusion of permanence and infallibility of the modern-day Babel came crashing down.

New York has since recovered its vibe... Despite the shadow cast and the symbols dashed to the ground... despite a devastating economic crisis in 2008... Continuity prevails, along with a new fragility to punctuate its cocky virility.

A feminine quality has at last invested the city, offering up, beyond the face of finite and temporary, the humble condition of humanity. With «NY Energy», my ambition is to make the city's particular vibration visible, while at the same time framing the now imaginable possibility of its disappearance. MK

Beyond survival, happiness is the key driver of humanity.

Its engine, its ideal, but also his misfortune ... because if happiness does not happen according to our desires, it becomes our failure, our misfortune ...

Eden, the garden of Origin, focuses on its particular space, almost all the desires of the Human. Everything is within reach hand, food and beauty, innocence and love, peace and sensuality. But there is a condition, which makes the price: do not touch the Tree of Knowledge, also called Tree of Good and Evil. The apple is the forbidden fruit.

Yielding to the temptation Edenic pair then knows the fall, and history has just begun.

Since nostalgia took hold of the man and it never ceases to regain that bygone era. And the union of two beings, their primordial reconciliation, is one of the most powerful vectors of this reconquest.

In «Eden Stories» I stage mainly couples in this confrontation more or less silent, dramatic or poetic, sublime or ridiculous. MK

le sanctuaire

"Homo Fukushima" is a mutant... the most advanced representative of the human species, more or less adapted to an environment whose climatic and geological components are intertwined with politics, economics and demographics...

I have chosen Japan for my demonstration, like a symbolic laboratory of the universal challenges facing humanity. It is a country that encapsulates nearly every potential risk, and is known for its geologically vulnerable terrain. Although volcanoes, earthquakes and tsunamis have always shaped Japan's topography and culture, recent history (Hiroshima), the economy (high tech), urban density, ecology (the civil nuclear industry) and politics (in granting a private operator the right to set up nuclear reactors at the ocean's edge, for example) add their impact to the mix...

Fault lines and subduction zones have always posed a threat to Japan's survival, but in the event of a major incident, it may be man who will outsmart geology and enable a complete evacuation of the archipelago.

Homo Sapiens, who always adapts, now faces brutal and deeply disruptive change. Unconsciously, he becomes Homo Fukushima: he who draws strength from the very nature of this new challenge.

Beyond the struggle for survival, which stimulates man's intelligence and ingenuity, a gnawing impression of fragility and an acute awareness of instability endure. This is where intelligence—but also spiritual strength—will rise to the occasion...

"Homo Fukushima" can be summarized as an artistic rendering of postmodern man. MK

Limits are the fundamental issue in our relationship with the world. No organism, no structure, can take on embodied form without them. Limits restrict us as much as they protect and characterise us.

I am defined not only by what I do, but by what I cannot do.

From Babel to Philae, the history of mankind has been one long quest to reach beyond our limits. Transgression is tempting but hardly viable when it fails to respect the integrity of the structures and entities around us. This observation led our ancestors to invent religions and laws.

Most limits are a necessity of life; reaching beyond them is a necessity of dreams.

This latest series, Microcosmes, offers a metaphor for the seeming contradiction between the need to preserve limits while pushing beyond them. The forms it takes – spheres, cubes, pyramids, and various containers – are the territory of a restrained, yet active emotion. The play of interactions guides us through the maze of fundamental desires.

The harmonies that arise are a source of peace – and of questions. A fourth dimension can break through unexpectedly.

It is as much a game as a lab experiment. The production of closed worlds teeters between asphyxia and the dizzying multitude of potentialities. MK

to the blue

The beach is a contemporary place. It differs from the port, the shore of a wild coast or estuary, by its ludic, human and sensual sides. The beach has grown along with urbanization, which it seems vital outlet. More the city becomes oppressive, stressed, laborious, swarming and concrete, and more the beach looks like an obliged shadow, a double saving. The one and the other are two sides of a world that becomes focused, uniformed, interconnected while emptying its traditional values.

The beach is the dream which support the urban pressure. By its nudity, by forgetting schedules, with a newfound sense of freedom, with its horizontal lines and its imposing nature, the beach contradicts the city while perpetuating.

In this project I settled in the dreams of my characters. With them I watched the wide, invented games, and especially let thoughts wander. Because rid of clothes, tensions, obligations, schedules, identities, we allow free rein to the images, desires and to the unexpected surprise ...The beach is therefore a pretext, a way of approaching the self shores.

For this, the real has here just the importance of going beyond. MK

Life is a game

The sphere is the geometrical figure which constitutes the physical and aesthetic bond of this work. But also the symbolic link: representing our planet, but also the cycle of life, in its finitude and its infinitude. The intervention of man is harmonious or accidental, creative or destructive. The man paces his land in an illusion of infinity, while he turns in circles without knowing it.

Borders are at the heart of the process : preserving them or transgressing them according to circumstances. Climate warming, wars, impoverishment, overpopulation, globalization and its perverse effects, access to drinking water, fascination for consumption, everything is in place for a time of instability where migration will take place at an exponential rate. Exiles from the peasants to the cities, from the poor countries to the haves, from desertified lands to those still preserved ... And not the least, the internal exile due to the drying up of centuries-old customs and traditions, and, for the richest , the brutal confrontation with peoples and realities that one would have wished to conceal.

Disasters will call to order and there will be no choice but to adapt. MK
